Part B. CV SUMMARY (max. 5000 characters, including spaces)

Well-known international expert in radiochemistry, POC flux and gravitational biological pump quantification. I performed my PhD in Applied Nuclear Physics in the Universidad de Sevilla, developing low level counting techniques for radioactivity counting and development of radiochemical techniques. I fulfilled my postdoc in Institut de Ciencia y Tecnología Ambientals, Universidad Autónoma de Barcelona (postdoctoral Fellowship MICINN-Fulbright) working in the use of radioactive pairs ^{234}Th - ^{238}U y ^{210}Po - ^{210}Pb to estimate ocean carbon export. I specialized in radiochemical methodologies, measurement techniques and application to the ocean. I was assistant professor at UPO, where in collaboration with Dr. F de Soto we developed stochastic and computational tools to mechanistically simulate sinking particles in the ocean.

Afterwards, I moved forward in the knowledge of the Biological Pump and its accurate quantification. On one hand we developed an innovative method to evaluate particle sinking velocities based on radionuclide disequilibrium, on the other hand, we applied the stochastic simulation to the interpretation of ^{234}Th results according to sampling and bloom moment. On a second topic, with CNA-US-CSIC, we worked actively on the use of long-life radionuclides (^{129}I , Pu , ^{236}U , using AMS techniques), as tracers of marine water masses, including Lagrangian models of ocean circulation. We make important progresses developing radiometric techniques, defining their biogeochemical models, and defining the circulation of the Arctic, Pacific and Atlantic Oceans. An additional research line in the field of Geochemistry, is followed in collaboration with the CICCartuja-CSIC, focusing on the analysis of bentonites clays as geological or long-term engineering barriers of nuclear wastes.

In the present, I lead the research line Radioactive Tracers in the Ocean. In the last five years, I have led three projects related with the biological pump (2 J. Andalucía and 1 MSCA funded), focusing on the evaluation of particle sinking velocity using radioactive pairs and particle imaging techniques. Furthermore expanding the compilation of ^{234}Th - ^{238}U data to evaluate carbon export and transfer efficiencies, publishing the most comprehensive ^{234}Th compilation ever prepared.
